* The canvas : You can add and edit layers using the Canvas tool. The Canvas works in combinations with other tools to help you build complex images. The Canvas is a large blank canvas where you can see the image laid out, and use the color palette to change the color of your layers. If you click on the Canvas in the toolbox window, you are presented with the color palette shown in Figure 7-5. The Tool Palette shows the tools available to you while in the Canvas. As you use Photoshop, you'll find that you use different combinations of tools to make your images. Figure 7-5. The Tool Palette gives you quick access to the most common tools in the program, in addition to other tools and palettes. The bottom of the palette contains tools to help you with image management. The Layers panel shows the different layers that are on your canvas, and the Tools panel lists the tools you've used (see Figure 7-5). If you click and hold the left mouse button on the top of the canvas, you can drag the canvas to resize the entire image, and you can drag the individual layers to make changes. You can also access all of Photoshop's tools on a menu option by choosing Edit → Edit with Selection Tool from the menu at the top of the screen. You can use the tool on a single layer, multiple layers, or all layers at once, depending on the tool. For example, if you want to retouch the edges of your picture, you can use the Free Transform tool (Ctrl+T) on the top layer, as shown in Figure 7-6. Figure 7-6. The Free Transform tool allows you to change the size and shape of an object, or the size and shape of a part of an image or a layer. In this example, the retouching is done on the layer directly above the layer you're viewing. ## Using Photoshop Tools Photoshop gives you tools to help you accomplish a specific task, and you can use these tools in a variety of ways. Although you could spend a lot of time spending hours learning the manual ways to use each tool, in this section we focus on what you need to know about using each tool from the drop-down menu of the Tool Palette. We'll use several tools throughout this book to explain different ways to use them.

Main menu Post navigation Snowball effect With nearly every major tournament coming up in a couple of weeks (men's and women's), I thought I'd put together a quick post to share our page view data for the season thus far. What's significant about this graphic is that we've been able to perform three very different "based on country of origin" analyses to look at the data: European "as one" data. Overall ("global") data, including USA data USA data only I'm happy to note that our page views haven't fallen off a cliff from last year, and they are, as I would expect, generally lower from December/January to February/March. Next year we hope to be able to re-evaluate things using this data. There will be one big (3 way) country-group analysis for all of the data which will give us a more detailed analysis of page views that are country-specific, which I think would be interesting to see. I do note, however, that our overall data has seen a slight increase in UK-centric searches from last year – probably because I had the UK qualify for the Olympics this year. We'll have to see if that persists as the year progresses or if it's a one-time thing. that T does the following: - $T(x_0)$ is an "event" from $\mathcal{P}(X \times E)$, $T(x_0) = \{x \times e \,\, | \,\, e \in E, (x,e) \in D\}$; - for every $e \in E$, $T(x \times e)$ is a "projection" in $\mathcal{P}(X \times E)$, $T(x \times e) = \{(x,e') \in X \times E \,\, | \,\, e' \in E, (x,e') \in D\}$; - for every $(x,e) \in D$, the $\mathcal{P}(X \times E)$-set $T(x \times$

Separation of co-polymers by biosurfactant addition and characterization of rheological properties. The separation of by-product polymers from polymer blends is very important and should be applicable for other industries also. In the present study, the use of biosurfactant produced by Klebsiella pneumoniae was explored for separating co-polymers. Based on the hydrophobicity of the co-polymers, a reasonable mixture was determined. Biosurfactant was used to separate the co-polymers from a mixture of the two polymers. A combination of co-polymers was prepared with the ratio of 50% of one and 50% of the other. Biosurfactant was added to the mixture at various ratios. Rheological properties of the mixtures were measured using a rotational viscometer to determine the optimum ratio of biosurfactant in the mixture. The results showed that the viscosity of the mixture decreased as the biosurfactant concentration increased. By reducing the viscosity of the co-polymer mixture, it is possible to separate the two components easily. The separation efficiencies of the mixture with and without biosurfactant were found to be 99.97 and 94.9%, respectively. We're using cookies. We use them to give you the best experience.
