The state's official watchdog will investigate a complaint filed by a New York congressional candidate that he was bullied and mocked by other Democratic and Republican members of Congress. Former attorney general Eric Schneiderman had filed a complaint with the U.S. House Office of Congressional Ethics on Friday alleging that former Rep. Joe Crowley (D-N.Y.) ridiculed him on the House floor and then had a campaign staffer mimic him doing the same thing during a rally in his Queens neighborhood. The New York Post reported Sunday that the former New York attorney general had also received phone calls from similar mocking and tone-deafness from other members of Congress. Schneiderman sent a letter to House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) on Sunday saying he was launching an investigation into the alleged mistreatment of the U.S. congressman by his Democratic colleagues. "My staff and I are reviewing the complaints filed against the members of Congress, and our office will be conducting an investigation into the alleged misconduct in accordance with House rules and the settlement provisions of the pertinent ethics statute," Schneiderman said in a statement released by Pelosi. Schneiderman had also earlier written to members of Congress on Thursday demanding an investigation into the alleged impropriety, and in a statement, the House Ethics Committee said it was aware of Schneiderman's letter. "Ethics Committee staff has been in contact with the U.S. House Office of Congressional Ethics to assist them in their review," the committee said in a statement. "As such, we will not comment further on the matter at this time." Schneiderman's decision to investigate comes after a heated debate Friday in the House over whether Crowley had bullied Schneiderman. Crowley, the No
