References Category:Video games developed in India Category:Windows games Category:Windows-only gamesWildlife farm A wildlife farm is a commercial facility that seeks to produce farm animals or other farm products for commercial purposes. It may sell the animals directly to the public, or indirectly through a middleman such as a slaughterhouse, meat packer or a meat processing plant. These facilities are distinct from those which produce meat for consumption, which are generally referred to as abattoirs. Wildlife farms are most commonly found in developing countries and are primarily used for the production of farm animal products (e.g., for meat and dairy). These facilities may also exist in developed countries as part of a captive conservation breeding program. In some parts of the world, "wildlife ranching" is a misnomer; wildlife farms are not designed to stock animals in the wild, but to breed and produce farm animals. In many developing countries, the major animal products are poultry and fish. In some cases, livestock production is expanded to generate meat and milk for the domestic market. In other cases, livestock production can be used to produce manure and other biological products for agricultural or commercial purposes. In some of these cases, this manure can be
