Cervical necrosis after modified radical mastectomy. A case report. Cervical necrosis after modified radical mastectomy has rarely been described. We report the case of a patient who underwent both a modified radical mastectomy and axillary node dissection for a left breast cancer and who subsequently developed cervical necrosis. To our knowledge, this is the first report of cervical necrosis after modified radical mastectomy. We believe that this complication resulted from the combination of cold knife dissection and placement of an intermuscular flap.
Objective: To evaluate the accuracy of the position of the os calcis in patients with hip and knee osteoarthritis in comparison with healthy individuals. Design: In this study, which was carried out at the balance control laboratory of the Physiotherapy Department of Istanbul Medipol University in the period from January 2007-January 2008, we aimed to investigate the accuracy of os calcis position and its effect on equilibrium and to determine this relationship between patients with hip and knee osteoarthritis and healthy individuals. Materials and methods: We studied 30 subjects who were divided into two groups of 15 each. Group 1 comprised subjects in the osteoarthritis hip group, and group 2 included individuals in the osteoarthritis knee group. The same assistant performed both static and dynamic evaluations. Results: We found statistically significant differences in static and dynamic parameters between the two groups. It was determined that static parameters cannot be used as a sole determinant of the accuracy of the os calcis and dynamic parameters are more effective for the analysis of the positional accuracy of the os calcis. Conclusions: Patients who have involvement of the hip and knee joints have a change in their dynamic and static parameters. We found significant differences between the hip and knee osteoarthritis patients and the healthy group regarding static and dynamic parameters. This study also determined that the static and dynamic parameters of the os calcis are more effective for the analysis of the positional accuracy of the os calcis.--- abstract: 'In the present paper we establish the equivalence between the notion of complete family of  $S^$ -pairs and the standard notion of vector-valued Banach space, in the framework of Hopf  $S^$ -algebras. We apply this equivalence to obtain the duality for the category of Hilbert  $SC^*$ -b
