As soon as you launch StreamGaGa, you will notice its black-themed interface and its tab-based design. The first thing that pops is the search form, which allows you to perform in-app searches based on specific keywords. By default, StreamGaGa performs the search on YouTube, opening the page in a different tab. Alternatively, you can use the integrated browser and the one-click shortcuts to navigate to specific sites, such as social media (Facebook, Instagram, Twitter) and other content sharing webpages, such as Vimeo, for instance. All the compatible websites are sorted in alphabetical order, allowing you to quickly jump to the one you need. Subscribers have access to VIP services, which include Netflix, Amazon, Hulu, HBOMax, and more. When a link in the integrated browser is copied to the clipboard, StreamGaGa, a popup window is shown, allowing you to select the format to download (audio or video) and choose the output quality from a drop-down list. At this point, you can also import a list of URLs stored in a text file and send them all to the download queue. To put it another way, StreamGaGa also supports batch downloads. A video downloader with support for multiple services StreamGaGa is a handy tool to have around, especially if you want to grab content from multiple websites.
