Where will it be used? The waste is to be converted into bio-char, and buried in an area where the temperature is approximately 400 degrees. The burn off process will continue for approximately 100 years. "During the composting of the waste the process of making bio-char takes place," said Gadsden. "The waste becomes a dust that turns into carbon. The tromping that goes on as the waste is processed and turned into mulch or compost, it doesn't have any negative effects. It's this dust that turns into charcoal." This concept is used in Australia and will be in Vietnam, China and Tanzania, according to Gadsden. The bio-char process will be secured, meaning people can't dig up the waste or disturb the process. However, when the fill is placed, the area will be fenced off, so they will not be digging into the ground. "We have to teach them (the village residents) some basic skills," said Gadsden. "They have to learn how to work with wood, how to build a shelter. We have to teach them to apply basic eco-technology such as water filtration, using bio-char." Gadsden said that although she is not living on the land herself, she and Gadsden Co. are working with local residents to bring the process to fruition.

Question: Using linux? Find all directories which matches the following rules: Have a file type of.jpg Or a file type of.png If the the directory contains only such files, but no other file types, it should be included in the output. I have tried to figure this out in the "quick way" (try and error) and got the following things to work: Find all directories matching /.../.../...//.png. See List all directories using find -print0 with extglob and grep Replace the the directory name by a variable using the "perl -p" command. I know that there are more clever ways to do this, but please take this as a starter for my question and not as a "questions-for-me" question. This was done with find -type d -print0 | perl -pe's@^(./)?([^/])(.)$@\3\4@ge' which yields something like /usr/share/kde4/apps/amarok_collection/ /usr/share/kde4/apps/amarok_collection/ /usr/share/kde4/apps/amarok_collection/ /usr/share/kde4/apps/amarok_collection/ /usr/share/kde4/apps/amarok_collection/ /usr/share/kde4/apps/amarok_collection/ and if I use a similar command as answered in the link above it lists the directories I would expect. So how do I make this better? A: As you found out, the answer is that this is difficult to do in a completely automated way. But you can get close. I am making some assumptions as to what is going on with the extglob attribute because your question does not specify it.
