Similarities and differences between human hair and silk proteins. Human hair and silk are two natural fibrous materials with rigid mechanical strength and soft nature. For a long time, the fine structure, chemical composition, biocompatibility, optical, electronic and biophysical properties of both materials have been focused on. However, the mechanical properties of hair and silk need to be deeply studied. In particular, the relationships between the mechanical properties of silk and its protein contents are worth studying. This review summarizes the recent development of hair and silk proteins and the advances in understanding hair and silk mechanical properties. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION MAR 09 2015 MOLLY C. What is a netminder? 3 Dec 2017 Stardew Valley's first netminder is now up and running! Today we've released a new - and unexpected - update to Stardew Valley, and that update has been a netminder. If you're new to the game, a netminder is someone who does the very important job of keeping you from bumping into the tops of the town's buildings, and of clearing out areas that are hazardous to public health. But, there's a hitch. You are now a netminder - not a gardener, not a fisherman, not a construction site manager, not an old retired guy who likes to sing songs and tell stories. You're a netminder. That means you're no longer the town's honorary gardener, fisherman, construction site manager, town hero, and a legend. Instead, you're the community's netminder, a person who protects the town from hazards and keeps things from falling down. But, what are netminders actually doing? Why do they need to clear up "hazardous" areas? Why can't they just keep them tidy? Read on for an explanation. Where do I find the netminder? The first netminder in your town is located on the upper part of the main street. Note that the netminder position is higher than the regular gardener position - it's easier to climb up the steps than to reach the ground. What about the town crossroads? You can find a netminder there too. Note that you have to climb a section of the bridge. There are two netminder platforms, one at the north end of the bridge and one at the south end. The north platform is slightly easier to reach than the southern one. I'm in the middle of town, and I can't find the netminder. Heck, if you ask me, you're lucky that you can even find this netminder. It seems

Q: How to build an equivalent of define-struct in python? I want to create a struct with the following definition: `struct node *foo (int i);` And then I want to do something like: `node.foo(5)` How can I create such a struct? How would I call functions like `print`? UPDATE Structuring my application, I want the functions `foo` and `bar` to be in a file named `foo.c`. Similarly, I would like the file `bar.c` to define a struct with an equivalent of the following implementation of `foo`: `struct node *foo (int i) { //some implementation here }`

A: I want to create a struct with the following definition: You can't define C structs. C is a much too low-level language for this. You can, however, define user-defined types that can be accessed and passed in the same way you are thinking of using structs: `class foo: def __init__(self, arg): self.some_attribute = arg def some_function(self): print "Howdy!" foo(some_argument) foo(some_argument).some_function()`

Your edit is close, but you must return a pointer to a struct when the method returns. `struct node *foo (int i) { struct node *result = NULL; // 0) { struct node *tmp = malloc(sizeof *tmp); tmp->data = i; result = tmp; } return result; }`

A: You cannot define a struct in Python. However, you could define a class, and then you could inherit the class in Python from your C code. So you can have exactly the same effect. However, note that if you implement a struct `node *foo (int i)` in C, you're not actually getting any data related to the function. The parameters are just passed into the struct function for later when you call it. The actual
