University of New Mexico researchers claim they have gotten the first-ever evidence of a dinosaur snapping its own head off in defense of its life. Called a crocoduck, the dinosaur was found three years ago in New Mexico, where it was eventually studied by a team led by Mike Taylor of the University of New Mexico and Dr Luke Tingley of the University of Kansas. The fossil was encased in quartz, according to a recent article in the Journal of Vertebrate Paleontology. Despite the unusual characteristics of its bones, experts have long considered the crocoduck a relative of the ancient crocodiles. Recent discoveries in Asia, however, have revealed that there are many known dinosaur species that were shaped much more like T. rex than alligators. The reptile's remains yielded new insight into dinosaur skin anatomy, yielding the first evidence of feathers on the head of a dinosaur. The crocoduck possessed broad, flat, plate-like scales on its head, a trait it shares with birds today. This is also seen in early theropods — the group of meat-eating dinosaurs that includes tyranosaurs and velociraptors — indicating that the head of the dinosaur was likely covered in feathers during part of its life. The crocoduck also shared some similarities with the ancient crocodile T. rex, such as a heavy jaw and a curved tibia — leg bone. "This dinosaur was living in the same time period as the allosaurs — older groups of dinosaurs that were crocodilians," said Tingley in a statement

All In One SEO WordPress Plugin Version: 4.0.14; All In One Seo Premium Plugins, 6.1.11. Multiple Domain Support PRO v4.0.1, WordPress Premium Plugins, 9/3/2021. a case in which a defendant's conviction for rape was upheld, the jury could find the defendant guilty of a lesser included offense, such as contributing to the delinquency of a minor. See State v. Brantley, supra, 120 N.J. at 491, 552 A.2d 739. Similarly, in Blakey, supra, 305 Md. at 700, 506 A.2d 225, the Supreme Court of Maryland ordered a new trial after a jury convicted the defendant of first-degree murder despite the trial judge's sua sponte charge of second-degree murder. The Court held that a properly instructed second-degree murder charge should have been given because the defendant presented a sufficient motive for the killing the father's attempts to punish the defendant for stealing his car. Ibid. We conclude that the defendant's parents did not have a right to pursue litigation in the name of their daughter's estate; that the defendant had an absolute right to a jury instruction on involuntary manslaughter; and that the trial court's failure to properly instruct the jury deprived defendant of due process of law. We therefore reverse defendant's conviction for involuntary manslaughter and remand for retrial on that charge. Reversed and remanded. NOTES [1] The manslaughter statute provides in pertinent part: A. The trial court shall inform the jury of its duty with respect to a request for a charge on a lesser included offense when the evidence would permit a finding of guilt of the lesser offense and the elements of that offense are identical to part of the elements of the greater offense. B. The trial court may, but need not, instruct the jury that a defendant has the right to be tried only for the offense charged, that the offense charged has been committed, that guilt may be inferred from the circumstances or that the burden is on the State to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. C. An offense
