[Determination of the picrotoxin type site structure in bovine GABA-gated chloride channel by photoaffinity labeling of the mutant I327V with [alpha-32P]azidopicrotoxin]. The GABA-gated Cl⁻ channel (GABAC) is an important target for development of anesthetics. However, the agonist action mechanisms of GABAC have not been clarified yet. In order to identify the picrotoxin type site of GABAC, the I327V mutant was produced by a site-directed mutagenesis of a bovine GABAC cDNA. The replacement of Ile-327 to Val produced no functional GABAC currents, which suggested that this site is important for the agonist action of picrotoxin, which has been identified as a picrotoxin type site. The I327V mutant of GABAC was then labeled with [alpha-32P]azidopicrotoxin in inside-out configuration of the membrane patch to identify the picrotoxin type site structure, where the agonist action of picrotoxin is supposed to occur. The extent of [alpha-32P]azidopicrotoxin labeling was increased with increasing membrane concentration of the mutant channels at 2.5-10 microM picrotoxin. The binding was displaced by micromolar concentrations of picrotoxin, which suggested that the binding of [alpha-32P]azidop c9d1549cdd
