Only about 300 cases have been reported in the literature. We report a case of primary pancreatic angiosarcoma that metastasized to the liver. A 73-year-old man was admitted to our hospital with the chief complaint of anorexia and weight loss. He had a 3-month history of severe epigastric discomfort and was suspected of having pancreatitis. He underwent surgery for the pancreatic tumor and subsequent histopathology of the resected specimen revealed an angiosarcoma of the pancreas. He received 5 courses of systemic chemotherapy with gemcitabine, cisplatin, and docetaxel

Wall Street Junior is a simulation game based on an equilibrium-targeted, event-driven model of economy and financial markets. The simulation evaluates the performance of economy's components and predicts the state of markets accordingly. Players have the option of interacting with the markets and trying out different investment strategies, yet to be successful in such one has to be aware of the current situation on the exchange floors and constantly keep up with the news not to miss anything that might render his investment invaluable. The Freedom of Simulation Your behavior on the market, as of a player, is entirely up to you; one may choose to buy a bunch of stocks today and sell them tomorrow with a profit, go for bonds while speeding up the simulation a little to receive the coupon payments claiming profit on the long run, or don't bother with the instrument trading at all and place their bets in the form of options that will expire one day with a (hopefully significant) premium. Some investments may, however, bear some risk, and it is then reasonable to hedge against inconvenient market moves in order to lessen the possible negative outcomes. Extensions to the Original Model Apart from the vanilla trading of instruments, currencies and derivatives, your company is fully capable trading on margin, offering loans to ordinary customers and issuing fixed-income securities on its own. These ways of raising capital give you the ability to operate with creditors money, thus maximizing the profits, but everything comes at a price and the interest responsibilities might one day present a significant burden, if not issued with care. The game features a set of tutorials, campaign scenarios and a sandbox mode. The tutorials are written in an easy-going fashion, not going into much detail but covering all necessary topics and providing references to external resources discussing those of lesser importance. Campaign scenarios are merely a guided set-up with limitations regarding the options you have. The sandbox mode is stripped of all limitations and allows you to experiment on the simulation, with no exception of bringing companies on the brink of bankruptcy. Development Decisions Wall Street Junior was developed with the specific intentions of making a realistic simulation. These intentions had the positive effect of the game becoming (at times literally hand-) editable and easy to be modded, with the rather negative side effect of the user interface becoming complicated at the first sight. The game is in the Alpha stage and we actively encourage all player feedback to help us correct undesired behavior of the simulation and improve all the parts that might require further clarification. What's new in Duster:

Wondering if you can have a laugh at rowing questions? Here's a hint! No snooze alarm is going to get you out of this. I know, but Rome isn't actually Stony Stratford. Sorry to disappoint.

However, I just heard a very interesting question regarding a recent trip to the Barberini estate in Rome. This question was asked on Twitter and the response from @necrobybones and also on The Ramblings of Celebs' personal Twitter. Now here's a solid puzzler that required some creative thinking and creativity from this blogger. That's why you should be careful when choosing your answer. Watch out for my clever "Pose of Poo" knee-slide!

Okay, it's not really a puzzle (and not a pose, either) but it is noteworthy. Just saying the word "pose" brings to mind that image, don't you think? As we'll see in the Tweet provided, this is a Tweet Deathmatch - a Twitter trivia game that pits celebrity tweets against each other. Do you really want to face this thing? Anyway, don't be scared, just enjoy this very interesting riddle.

Then, take a guess and let the fun begin: 21 Responses So, I would like you to get creative and give me everything I need to solve "how do I get out of this"? Is there a joke buried in here somewhere about rowing? Please let me know. I'm stumped for a variety of reasons and would greatly appreciate your help. Well, I can only present the facts and that is "you will be released". What else have you? "GET OUT OF HARROW. OH NO." Isn't that why you're in a row of chairs? So, I'm in a row of chairs. They're all identical chairs and I can only move forward but when I lay my head down on a bottomless cushion I can't feel anything below my neck or above my head - going far, it's a drive. PLEASE TELL ME THERE'S A COMPLICATION BEHIND THE STORY. THE DELIVERY MAN COME, WON'T YOU? BT
