The present disclosure relates to a photocurable organosilicon composition and an image forming method using the photocurable organosilicon composition. As a photocurable organosilicon composition used for forming a hardened section in an optical member, a photocurable organosilicon composition having an amino group has been well-known. This structure is formed by an electrophotographic process, for example, using a photocuring apparatus. In an image forming apparatus such as an electrophotographic copier, printer, or fax machine, a charging operation, an exposure operation, a development operation, a transfer operation, a fixing operation, and a cleaning operation are sequentially carried out on a surface of an image bearing member such as a photoconductor drum, and a toner image is formed on the image bearing member. During the cleaning operation, a toner and a toner residual offset (hereinafter, referred to as "offset toner") remaining on the surface of the image bearing member are removed from the surface of the image bearing member. The toner and the offset toner are in a state having a high moisture content and have a high absorption property. Thus, when a proportion of these remaining toner substances on the surface of the image bearing member is increased, more toner substances are added to the image bearing member. Thus, surface properties of the image bearing member deteriorate to give toner filming and fog of the image. For example, when a toner image is formed on a photoconductor having good surface properties, the toner image may be degraded in image quality. In this regard, a photocurable organosilicon composition having excellent offset resistance has been recently developed. For example, a crosslinked thin organic film containing poly(n-octyl methacrylate) and polydimethylsiloxane mixedly dispersed and having various property is widely used as an intermediate layer member (intermediate layer surface) of the photoconductor (for example, see JP-A-2009-4174). However, a photocurable organosilicon composition having a high proportion of a component having a high molecular weight,
