The on-screen opponent is influenced by the movements of each individual player, resulting in more responsive, unpredictable and realistic gameplay. An AI opponent's unpredictable movements are no longer achieved by simply turning off all contextual tackling, and instead use variations on the contextual defending, based on where the player is located and the situation on the pitch. FIFA 22 includes a multitude of options and tweaks to player movement, control, passing and shooting that have improved and enhanced player movement, while also refining the feel and presentation of gameplay. Players can now choose their first touch options at the start of every match including "Aim for Feet" in 1v1 situations which means passes are now more fluid. Fans can also create a direct pass by pressing, once and holding, the L2 button. Accurate through balls make running closer to the player easier, while passing options are enhanced to allow players to pass through multiple opponents. Players can also use off the ball movement to distribute a pass to teammates and the new "Headers" and "Shoots From Balancing" options mean it's easier to hit a diving header and send a low bouncing shot in. Overall, the goalkeeping position has been reworked to provide better passing options and more shots with increased accuracy. Defenders now have more control over the pitch including the ability to run out from tight positions to intercept a pass and the ability to complete timed tackles. Improved tactical intelligence means players can take advantage of the increasingly complicated passing and shooting situations created by tactical play, allowing them to affect the play and take advantage of rival mistakes. Defenders can also push up the pitch more easily, and use cover to track high crosses and overlapping runs to attack. Updated game engine
