use analysis for a building or a campus. AEP software allows users to identify the most cost-effective solution to meet a building's heating, cooling, and electricity needs. The article concludes with a discussion of the energy savings that can be achieved from using the Cleaner Power program. 2. Another article in this issue discusses the Cleaner Power program and explains how to use the AEP software to understand a building's end-use energy requirements and to analyze the impact of proposed changes in the building's use of energy. Also included are a description of green power and a definition of the term fuel cell. 3. The final article discusses green power and fuel cells. Information is provided on environmentally sensitive products and materials, regulatory issues, fuel cell application sites, and building-related uses of the technology. It
