perl module with a function sub fn {... } I'd like to call that function from a php script. The php script needs to be able to call a method on an object whose constructor is defined in the module, and do so without having to require the module. How can I do this? A: A Perl object is nothing more than an associative array. Have a look at Data::Dumper; it will create a pretty dump of your object. If all you need is to call your function you can either use the object in your php script like $myObject->fn() or you could pack the function into the module, like package ModuleName; use strict; use warnings; our @functions = qw(fn); 1; and then call the function from php like ModuleName::fn(); Article content A man has been charged after the death of a dog whose body was found in a marsh outside a residential home in Orleans. Police were called to the 4800 block of Whipple Road on Oct. 8 for a report of a dog found dead. We apologize, but this video has

When the officers arrived, the dog — believed to be about eight years old — was found in a dog dumpster behind a house on the property. Officers with the SPCA attended the scene but their efforts were part of our Programming Practice series, where we'll explain some fundamental programming concepts and concepts that will help you understand how program flow can be interrupted, controlled, and resumed later on. Recently, we've seen some interesting problems where the program flow is interrupted for certain purposes, for example to add items to a list, check items in a list, and remove items from a list. To grasp the understanding of these problems and how to solve them, we'll be using a simple arraylist example. Example 1: Adding items to a list First, create a class called ArrayListDemo that has an arraylist: In our main class, we will create a list of String elements, add each element to the list, and print it out. List list = new ArrayList(); list.add("James"); list.add("Alice"); list.add("Hans"); list.add("James"); list.
