FAQs Part 4 - The Remote Desktop Server Hi, in part 4 of my guide, I will be focusing on the platform of "Remote Desktop Server", now, before we dive into the technical stuff, let's discuss what is involved in setting up a Remote Desktop Server. What's Remote Desktop? A Remote Desktop Server allows an individual to connect to a computer or device using their own computer, a computer at work, or a computer on a public network. A Remote Desktop Manager also called RDSM can be used as a Remote Desktop Server. Now, first thing you want to do is find a computer you can use as a Remote Desktop Server. Now, this can be done in a few ways. You can buy a router with the Remote Desktop Server feature built into it, or you can find a computer, that you already own, and purchase a Remote Desktop Server. Now, if you do own a computer, and you are considering a Remote Desktop Server feature, you should know that there is a limit to how many people can connect at any given time. Now, do not worry, you will be safe by setting your firewall settings to allow access for the type of connection that you are using. What's the difference between a Remote Desktop Server and a Remote Desktop Manager? A Remote Desktop Server is used to connect to a computer on a local network. Now, a Remote Desktop Manager is used to connect to a remote computer or device on a remote network, which can be across the internet or a local network. What Are Some of the Limitations to Using a Remote Desktop Server? The remote connection of a server is limited by the connection capacity of the server and the maximum connections that can be made at any given time. Now, I strongly advise to set up a Remote Desktop Manager, which makes it easy to use, and save a significant amount of money. Now, what are some of the Limitations of a Remote Desktop Manager? There are several things you need to be concerned with when looking at a Remote Desktop Manager. First and foremost, which connection type are you using? Can you be sure that any Network/Locally
