01. Create recipes 02. View nutritional info for a recipe 03. Analyze a recipe 04. Results Please note that this is beta software, and therefore might contain errors. We'd appreciate if you report them. E-mail me the results of your recipe analysis to thisthomas@rsdcoding.org IMPORTANT NOTES Please review this before using this application. This is a beta project. As mentioned in the main description, the application is buggy and it will eventually be replaced with a fully functional application. For this reason NutriCalc XF2 does not contain the "share" function. Share anything that you have created with this application by right-clicking on the file, and selecting "Share...". If you have some other input / analysis tools that I should know about, don't hesitate to contact me so that I can keep this database up to date. Download: ----- Ubuntu 14.04: Install: `sudo apt-get install xfce4-panel` Then run the command: `xfce4-appfinder` Or `sudo apt-get install xfce4-appfinder-plugin` Then add the following line to `xfce4-panel`: After doing that, you should see it in the left panel. System requirements: ----- iPad 2 with iOS 6: After using this application to access the build-in camera, the app does not work. The application does not respond to touch input, so it is impossible to use. It seems that this is a known bug within the iPad application. Don't hesitate to send me the details of the bug if you know any. This application is not a beta project. Apple does not support my software, and I have no way to change this. After trying to get rid of a duplicate icon in the dock in the iPad, I have managed to delete it. However, the absence of this icon means that some of the programs that normally appear in it cannot be opened from the dock. Effect of arylamide derivatives on proliferation, tyrosine kinase
