I'm testing an issue with the SQL Server instance. It fails to start with a Database Transaction could not be started because MSDTC is unavailable error. I've read several articles on this error with various people claiming that it's not really possible to use MSDTC when in an ASP.NET context. I've also tried putting the SQL Server instance into SQL Server 2005 compatibility mode. My final attempt was to change my connection string for the database to the following. Data Source=SERVERNAME\INSTANCENAME;Database=DBNAME; But even though I still get the error I'm curious as to why it's being caused. Any suggestions or advice on this error would be appreciated. A: To run ASP.NET in a MSDTC-enabled environment, you must be running as an NT service and pass /useLegacyDTC as part of the connection string. If you're talking about a web server running under IIS, you can specify that in the app pool. A: I've been getting the same error when trying to use DTC inside ASP.NET. I tried everything I could find in other forums but in the end I was getting the same error. So I created a brand new ASP.NET app using VB.NET, compiled and ran it on my system to test and sure enough I got the same error. Then I realised that there was another ASP.NET project on my machine that was using it, I couldn't remember the name or where it
