4X + procedural world generation + rhythm + dodge + arbitrary music + real time enemy spawning + bunnyhop + a tiny minimalist game engine. The interface is customized by your user. The animation is heavily inspired by Yume Nikki. ----- earrow Absolutely no reason to add "please," "thanks," or "thank you." ----- Mendenhall This game looks awesome, but for some reason i fear the player not being able to play it. I know that is what motivates some of the most awesome things on the internet, I just cant get past the fear thats in the back of my head. ~~~ dougb5 Thanks for reading! I suspect people like you might not like it because the art isn't right for you :) It's definitely meant to be something you can visit, play, and experience just for yourself. ----- alecst > Aebal: a procedurally generated rhythm game where you dodge generated enemies > synchronized to your choice of music. This is the most interesting idea i've seen in quite some time. > You must pay to start. I hope you succeed in making a product that doesn't require a pre-payment to actually play and get useful information. ~~~ dougb5 Thanks! We have a no-pay model. The pre-payment fee is to add that music to the audio system (so you can listen to it with the game). After that, you can download it using the same interface you're using to pay. This way, you don't need to use steam to activate/download the game, so you can use this same interface to download the music whenever you want to. ----- acemarke How do people play this? Does the game read your email or something? I was hoping to find a way to use my YouTube login to let me skip watching the ads on the playlist, but that's not present. ~~~ dougb5 There is no email or login, it's just a random assortment of music. You can download and play all of the music in the game for free. ----- wehadfun I don't understand why people are not releasing OSX version of apps. Apple makes money on mac users. Why not give the same treatment as to PC

While Euclyca has been a long-term project, spending about three months on its music, I feel there's still a lot more I could add to the game itself, which makes me happy.

I definitely love to see feedback and comments from you guys.

A: You wrote, "While Euclyca has been a long-term project, spending about three months on its music, I feel there's still a lot more I could add to the game itself, which makes me happy." but in the video, you talk a lot, but you add very little of that. I guess I'm just being nit-picky, but maybe maybe you should consider making a video similar to this and seeing people react to the song? Proofs on proof of Lebesgue dominated convergence theorem In Lebesgue's theorem for dominated convergence I find the following equation:
 where $f_n(x)$ is the Lebesgue measure, but what is the line of integration? How can I get a general inequality between integrals? A: The problem is in the expression on the far right of (2). According to the definition
