I think this is a pretty great way to introduce everyone to another student here.Q: How to synchronize threading and also perform actions? I want to load a lot of data simultaneously and after that I want to operate with that data synchronously. The problem is that the loading can be stopped by user action and we don't want to wait until the whole loading is done before performing some action with the data. The solution is to use threading. The question is: how can I perform synchronization? I have two classes: DataLoader - contains the real work and loading data DataOperator - performs some operations on data The DataLoader has to perform loading in a synchronous way, but the problem is that there can be other actions performed by DataOperator. I can't realize some kind of queue or synchronize blocks in DataLoader, because DataLoader is started by dataOperator. May be there is a way to use synchronization in DataLoader? Thanks. A: You could use a Condition variable from threading to synchronize the actions of your DataOperator with that of the DataLoader. DataLoader { private List data; private Condition condition; // constructor public void loadData() { data = buildDataList(...); condition.await(); // wait until data is loaded performOperations(data); } } public void actionPerformed(ActionEvent e) { // determine if DataLoader is loaded if(data == null) return; // perform the desired action on Data DataOperator.actionPerformed(...); } } home he downloaded a week of recordings of that concert. He stored these on a CD and then took it to a CD burning joint and had it done there, on the promise of a certain percentage. I used the copy, burning it to iTunes, because on the 100% max burn e79caf774b
