It marks the military alliance's 70th birthday and it will cover three strands: the Alliance, the Membership and the Alliance's leadership. The review examines trends over the past year and sets out how it will be shaped by NATO's ability to combat hybrid threats and complex threats, and by deeper instability in Europe. It notes that the Alliance continues to offer the most effective security, but that there are profound challenges. It examines how the Alliance can adapt to defend against emerging security risks and uses this to set out its vision for 2018 and beyond. This is one of several annual reviews to be published throughout the year. All are designed to be useful and informative documents, providing the opportunity for countries in the Alliance to see themselves in context. The Alliance's vision for the future and the priorities and demands that apply within that vision are also set out in the NATO Engagement and Confidence Building Measures. Leader NATO Secretary-General Jens Stoltenberg released a statement today announcing that Jens Gabriel, a retired Major General in the Swedish Armed Forces and Deputy Commandant for Joint Operations at the Norwegian Joint Headquarters, will serve as Secretary-General of NATO from 1 February 2018 to 31 December 2020.For months, Don Lemon has been making headlines. Beginning this week, he's going to be making headlines again. The CNN anchor said the network had a "bad decision" to run the New York City Marathon with Donald Trump's name emblazoned on a shirt for this year's event. Trump, who often is used as a punching bag in cable news segments,

Ultimate Radio Software which provides the.We need to define safe levels of ionizing radiation exposure because of the high cost of medical technologies to cure disease. Estimating radiation dose is extremely challenging because it depends on the patient-specific dose distributions. Meanwhile, the number of exposed people is increasing. Here, we present a quantitative understanding of radiation dose-dependent genome instability in a single cell. We first define the dose response for two DSB repair pathways: NHEJ and HR. We then propose a stochastic model of NHEJ and HR dynamics to explain the dose response. We show that accumulated DSBs decrease the survival of cells and lead to cell death in a dose-dependent manner. The cell death kinetics follow a linear dose response at doses below a certain threshold. The model predicts that the number of potentially lethal DSBs in the absence of HR is not much different from that in the presence of HR. Since the number of potentially lethal DSBs is generally negligible under normal physiological doses, we propose that a cancer cell has to commit HR for a lethal event. We then show that the risk of cell death increases with dose and dose rate. Finally, we extend our model to propose a dose-dependent cell cycle dynamics in the presence of DNA damage and analyze the cell cycle phase distribution and duration of cells in each cell cycle stage. Our study may help a better understanding of radiation-induced genome instability.
