The first trailer for the upcoming Sonic the Hedgehog movie arrived online this week, and fans have gone wild to check out the new footage. They aren't the only fans, though. While Sega isn't putting any money into the movie, they're making sure to include their mascot in the new trailer to make sure their name is out in the open. It's all for the fans, of course, but it's also a smart move for them. When the Sonic the Hedgehog movie happens, it will be the first time that we'll see the real Sonic the Hedgehog portrayed by a human. It's a good thing that Sega is giving the fans a huge opportunity to see their hero and the trailer has all of the things that fans are excited for. They definitely had a hand in getting some of the scenes in the trailer while he's seen in the car. Hopefully they'll continue to have a hand in giving him more personality and making him their own. The Sonic the Hedgehog movie doesn't have much of a release date set just yet. Sega has been tight lipped about the movie for a while, and it was only announced in December. The movie is being written by Jeff Fowler and director Jeff Fowler, and it will be directed by Jeff Fowler. Jeff Fowler has been in charge of many of the Sonic the Hedgehog games for the past few years, and he'll be doing the same with the movie. Hopefully they can come up with a good script and use as many of the themes from the games as possible. In the trailer, Sonic the Hedgehog is seen running and rolling into the car. While Sonic isn't in his video game form, he's there to help. Sonic is often seen as a playable character in the Sonic the Hedgehog video games. He has a following among the kids, adults, and even adults who are a little younger than the average age for the video games. The Sonic the Hedgehog movie is coming to 3D and IMAX theaters, and it's based on the 2009 game of the same name. It's only slated for release on November 8th in IMAX

How is an XML-File (say an Logcat, or the android-debug-report) parsed, and searched for relevant information in android? Is there a xml-parser which gets called by the system while reading the data files, or is it calculated by the application instead? Are there any tools to do this for me? I would like to find objects from a log-file for example, and maybe create a search-feature of my own. A: XML parsing is handled by tools in the Android framework. I don't know any tool that is called (or will be called) by the OS while reading data files but the framework provides APIs for this. I believe XML parsing is mainly handled in classes from the android.content package.
