Here are my tables: Many users would like to add their old phone numbers to the Users table. But we have to check the numbers to make sure they are unique. Many users will want to add their old phone numbers to the Numbers table. But, I can't make Numbers.Number the primary key, because I'd have to have another column to set a unique value. I think my only option is to do this: How can I set the primary key on Numbers.Number to be a composite of Numbers.UserID and Numbers.Number? A: From the documentation: A [compound] key is generated by adding any number of other key columns into a single primary key column. So you can add a composite key. You can even make one of them unique and the other non-unique. From the same documentation: When you first create a new table, a UNIQUE constraint is created for each column that is declared UNIQUE. For example, if you create a table with a single column, the table has a unique constraint on that column. However, when you add more columns to the table, that unique constraint applies only to the columns that are declared UNIQUE. And another example: For example, if you add a unique key column named first_name, and another named last_name, that key will only apply to records that have both first and last names. A: You can add as many keys to
