I recently came across this problem and I'm stuck on how this closure behaves. I'm trying to understand whether if multiple documents are read from Firebase Realtime Database, the AJAX callback closure gets executed parallel or it will be executed one after another one. function getData() { let x; $.ajax({ type: "GET", url: "", async: true, success: function(data) { let split = data.split(" "); for (x of split) { console.log(x); } }, error: function(data) { console.log("ERROR!"); } }) } so as soon as the first document is fetched from Firebase, I expect to see the first three logs. Instead it seems to be executing as in sequential manner and is blocking the execution until the first three logs are printed. A: JavaScript works by executing code sequentially, so yes, if you call the function then the callback will be called one after the other. Some browsers might optimize this by working
