Fantasy Historica is a completely original RPG Maker project, produced by D. C. Kairi Sawler and released under creative commons license. The setting of the game is the 15th Century, in the same part of the world as European cities like Paris, Rome or London, but with its own diversity and its own customs. The main hero, Valerian, is a young noble who falls in love with Veronique, the daughter of the King of the Kingdom. She, on the other hand, is the daughter of a Jewish high priest and feels deeply connected with the Jewish religion, even though the older part of her people is in exile in Babylon, and barely know what King Cyrus is doing nowadays. The game features two different endings and a special ending. The soundtrack is the original score of the game. This score is composed by D. C. Kairi Sawler and published under creative commons license, with full permission to use in your commercial projects. Feel free to share and post links, but please do not sell it. Community : Website : Twitter : Facebook : Instagram : Website : Twitter : Facebook : Instagram : After seeing that Street Fighter 2 had finally come to mobile devices, I began to get curious about the game, and after watching several videos, it seemed to be quite fresh, so I decided to take a shot. After finally having a chance to play Street Fighter 2 for myself, I found that I really like how Street Fighter 2 seems to evolve through time, and that its fighting system is really enjoyable. It still is the same system with slight nuances to make it feel fresh. This also becomes the first entry in the "dojo" series, although I'm not surprised, especially after I researched it more. I've always been a big fan of 2D side scroller fighting games, and this game presents a lot of fun in that as well. It has the same fight mechanics and it is very accessible, although it will take some time for you to master. If you're a fan of classic fighting games, I recommend it. A fun, simple, fast-paced and multiplayer game for those who like to have fun and have a good time in the process. Note: This game has no adverts, no in-game purchases, no micro-transactions, and no lock-ins. Online Multiplayer Platforms: PC/MAC/Linux/Android/iOS/Web This game is currently for sale on Steam with a 50% off discount for the review and demo.

Thanks so much! If you appreciate the review and/or this video, please leave a Like, Favorite, and Subscribe for more! Thanks for watching, and all your continuous support! Everything you need to get started is included in the Steam Wallet (gratis). If you want to keep playing after you finish the game, you'll want to have some sort of Stash in your Wallet as well. Dive into the world of Lilium, the world of devious mechanical creatures and fantastic flying machines. If you run out of cash in Lilium, you'll be stuck with a boring routine of making the same lumps of turd every day. It's time to change your fate! System Requirements: OS: Windows XP (SP2), Windows Vista (SP2) or Windows 7. Processor: Intel(R) Core(TM)2 Duo CPU Memory: 1 GB RAM (2 GB for the Windows XP version). Graphics: DirectX 8 graphics card with 256 MB VRAM. Storage: 1 GB available space, including the game data. Editor: None Account required: Steam Terraria is a 2D hybrid of a sandbox platformer and a survival game. It features a crafting system and permadeath. The game is set in a randomly generated world where anything can happen. You're dropped on a random land with a sword, a crafting table and your instincts. Your only goal is to survive and craft the best equipment. A lot of things can kill you in Terraria, from simple things like falling blocks, arrows, traps, monsters and pets to difficult challenges like spike traps, spikes, magic, fire and lightning. The more things you can kill with a single blow, the better your equipment will become. At the start of the game your crafting abilities are non existent. You'll start by making some armor, a few traps, and a lantern, then use your hard earned cash to buy your first crafting table. All equipment is created using blocks gathered from the ground and dropped from monsters. They are made with non existent crafting table and random items provided by the world. Crafting tables allow you to upgrade your
