Therefore I defined a wrapper-script for python, by calling:

#!/usr/bin/python import
os import sys import subprocess # python-2.6.2 # the extra \ before /usr/bin/python is very important! os.environ['PATH'] =
'/usr/bin/python:$PATH'

PROGRAM = '/usr/bin/R' os.environ['R_HOME'] = '/opt/R-2.10.2' os.environ['R_LIBS_USER'] = '/usr/lib64/R/library' subprocess.call(['bash', '-c'], stdin=None, stdout=None, stderr=None) (Source: And then I can call it from python: import subprocess subprocess.call(['/home/me/bin/R-the-R-wrapper'], shell=True) Then, the R code which I'm calling is as follows: library(graphics) desktop.file(year = "2010", month = "July", day = "5", name = "hat.png", icon = icon.png) hat = hatplot(x = (1:10), y = (10:1), v = vtext( strata = "Type", labels = (1:10))) I know that I can use matplotlib.use('Agg') as well, but my question b7e8fdf5c8

Q: bashparameter-invalid-switch I am trying to use a bash script that will execute a python script and pass some parameters. I have checked the syntax of the bash script and its parameters are correct. I've placed the bash script in the same directory as the python script and tried the script by typing ./directory-name/bin/directory-name my bash script is: #!/bin/bash path_source=./directory-name/bin/directory-name source $path_source; import sys args = sys.argv[1:] for i in range(2, len(args)): i+=2 print args i=1 while [$i -le $#] do echo $args[$i] i+=1 done the output of running the bash script is: $ bash./test.sh ./test.sh: line 3: [: -le: binary operator expected ./test.sh: line 5: syntax error near unexpected token `do' ./test.sh: line 5: `do ^

This is a command line utility (Batch File) which removes all of the Microsoft Genuine Advantage related registry and folder entries from your system. You will no longer receive "This is a Genuine Microsoft Product" message on the screen as long as you uninstall the software. Saving you hours of software installation and upgrade-time verification! Office Genuine Advantage Uninstaller is a tool that can be used to cleanse system of all genuine Microsoft Genuine Advantage related registry and folder entries and files. The Genuine Advantage program has a tendency to quickly turn into a nuisance for many Windows users. Many of them complain about the popups that appear on the screen several times a day and ask them to verify whether their copy of Windows is genuine. Now you can solve the problem, without the installation of new programs or rooting around in the registry. The program will immediately clear all entries related to genuine certification. You no longer need to worry about false positives. Office

Visit officegenuineadvantage.com and discover the latest free software and download officegenuineadvantage.com free! of "Dino?" Dino ain't no mo' and words is harsh so no one say that. I'm a fan too. The initial "Cochise" hook is the best hook since the separation of the Big 3. The rest of the song isn't that good. It's boring too. The video looks generic. Good luck with that, Tyler. It looks like Miami is going to be fun this weekend. Looking forward to the "End" show, not just by the last time it was played but also for, once again, seeing who will be on stage. It's a fun throwback, especially when the band
